Must Re-Employ Soldiers After War

An order-in-council from Ottawa, states that every man discharged from active service can expect to return to the job he left or to one equally favorable. Every employee who has had six months employment with any employer at the time of his enlistment must be re-instated in that same job under no less favorable conditions than if he had not enlisted.

There are conditions involved. An employer does not have to re-instate his employee if the latter does not apply for re-instatement within three months after discharge, or (in the case of men already discharged) within three months after the date of this order. Nor is it compelled if the employee fails, without good cause to report for work.

No employer will be required to re-instate an unfit man. "Any employer who fails to comply with these regulations shall be liable to a fine of $500 and any employee who is not reinstated on the conditions provided shall be entitled to damages in the amount of 12 weeks' pay."

Limited, for the furnishing of electric energy to the Town, was received and, on motion by Councillor Cork, was ordered filed.

Pioneer Leaves Great Canadian Heritage

Canada, a nation, strong, God-favored with the countless gifts of heaven! That is the heritage which the pioneers have given us, stated Lionel A. Forsyth, K.C., Montreal, in the concluding sentences of his speech to members of the Canadian Club and Women's Canadian Club in Edmonton recently.

Concluding his address, Mr. Forsyth read the following poem which he composed for the occasion.

Beneath the standard of St. George,
On foreign field and far,
Full many a foe has learned to know
Of what stuff free men are.

Beneath that flag, in serried ranks,
The Welshman and the Scot,
With many a file from Erin's tale
Have stood and yielded not.

That flag was proudly kept aloft,
A symbol of men free,
And made to fly 'neath every sky,
On ships on every sea.

By blood and sweat of Britain's men,
Her women's bitter tears,
That mothers shed with prayer bowed
And head.

Forseeing empty years,
The storied ramparts of Quebec,
The forts of Acadie
In days gone by were wont to fly
Great France's fleur de lys.

The boundless prairie's rolling wealth,
The ageless mountain heights,
Were won by strain and toil and pain
So too, our father's rights.

The wholesome seas that bound our land
Have 'neath that flag unfurled, Borne golden grain from western plains
To feed a starving world.

They builded strong 'on blood and sweat
And women's lamentation,
Stout hearts and true they carried Through

And made this land a nation,
A nation strong, with righteous strength,
God-favored, good to live in,
Where stream and field and forest yield.

The countless gifts of heaven.
This land we love, this nation great
Must stand the test of years,
And it shall live, but we must give
Our blood, our sweat, our tears.

A CALL TO ARMS

Liberty is threatened throughout the world by the forces of TYRANNY

AND WHEREAS Canada of her own free will is pledged to fight for FREEDOM by the side of Britain

AND WHEREAS the security and the welfare of every man, woman and child in Canada and of free peoples everywhere DEPEND UPON VICTORY

AND WHEREAS victory cannot be assured without the help of every LOYAL CITIZEN OF THIS DOMINION

Now be it known that there is URGENT NEED for stout-hearted able-bodied men to volunteer for ACTIVE SERVICE in the CANADIAN ARMY

Wherefore Canada sends out a

Call to Arms

And charges all true Canadians to heed and to help.

Given at National Defence Headquarters, Ottawa, this 9th day of July in the Year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and forty-one, and in the seventy-fifth year of Confederation.

GOD SAVE THE KING

The above is a reproduction of the proclamation read by Mayor Middleton from Town Hall.

On Thursday afternoon last, the voice of Mayor J. G. Middleton rang out from the front of the Town Hall, when he read a copy of the proclamation issued by Mr. J. L. Bailey, federal minister of defence at Ottawa, urging all men of military age to enlist in Canada's active army.

Printed on parchment and duly tied with red ribbon, and bearing facsimile of the Great Seal, the proclamation was delivered to the mayor by a military escort of active service men who during the reading stood to attention with drawn bayonets, before a small crowd of citizens.

The intention was to impress upon all Canadians the reality of the present war threat to Canada, and to inspire an awareness of the imperative need for men for active forces. Since the day when the warning hill-top fires of King Alfred the Great sprang across a threatened countryside, the Call to Arms has been an unfailing rallying cry to British peoples at war.

Town Band In Limelight At Lloydminster

After being hard at practice for the past few weeks, it was with great dismay that the town band was notified by phone that the July 1st Patriotic Sports Day at Vegreville (for which their services had been offered and accepted), had to be called off at the last minute on account of heavy rains.

The call came through at eight o'clock in the morning, just when the members were all loaded up in their cars, together with instruments, music, etc., and ready keyed-up with excitement. However, in order not to let the weather man cheat them out of a day's outing, a phone call was put through on the spur of the moment to Lloydminster (where another patriotic Sports Day was on schedule) again offering their services, which were readily accepted, much to the delight of all the band members.

Although making a late start, the trip was made without a hitch, and by one o'clock the band was out on the streets playing. Attired in their white uniforms, they paraded from the hotel to the post-office, and after rendering several mappy marches there, paraded back to the hotel, and from there, by cars to the grounds. With the grand stand as a background, the band rendered overtures, waltzes, marches, etc., for the entire afternoon, these all being well received by the audience—and the old army favorite "Colonel Bogey" was played twice on request.

Cloudy weather prevailed throughout most of the afternoon, but nevertheless, every member of the band had a bang-up day, not to mention a few prizes that were brought home from the old stands and the bingo table, and it was with the yells and cries of "Good Old Band" and "See You Again" ringing in their ears, that the cars pulled out of the grounds for home.

The Band as a whole would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Band, and all others who kindly put their cars at the disposal of the boys and girls for the trip.

Intense Heat Is Affecting Growth

The Bank of Montreal crop report states that in the prairie provinces a week of intense heat has adversely affected crops in Saskatchewan and to some extent in Alberta but stimulated healthy growth in Manitoba.

Cooler weather and heavy precipitation in the past few days have been beneficial, but good July rains are required. Loss from pests has been small, although a widespread infestation of sawfly threatens damage. There has been slight scattered damage from hail. In Quebec growth has been retarded throughout the greater portion of the province by excessive heat and lack of moisture, and hay and pastures have suffered. Rain is urgently needed. In Ontario prolonged drought with high temperatures has been detrimental to crops in nearly all parts of the Province and the situation is menacing.

In Alberta crops are progressing satisfactorily. Wheat is in shot blade and commencing to head. Recent heavy rains in Northern sections have been of considerable benefit to late sown grains. In parts of east-central and southern districts extremely high temperatures have depleted moisture supplies and good general rains are needed. Some slight hail damage has occurred in central areas.

Saskatchewan—Intense heat has caused deterioration, except in the southeast where moisture conditions are more favorable. Wheat is in shot blade and heading out short in drier areas, particularly in the central and southwest sections. Grasshoppers are prevalent in the south and there is considerable wheat stem sawfly, but damage is not yet severe. Good rains over the past weekend have revived crops, but more moisture is generally required. In Manitoba, hot weather has promoted rapid growth. Moisture conditions are good and given normal July precipitation prospects are quite favorable.

Some wheat is heading out and coarse grains are entering shot blade. Leaf rust is prevalent in the south, but no stem rust is in evidence. Damage from all causes is slight.

Stampede In Town Wednesday Next

At the Fair Grounds on Wednesday next, under the auspices of the Wainwright branch of the Canadian Legion, a big stampede will be held in which all the thrills of this class of entertainment are promised by those in charge.

Around one hundred of the best bucking broncos and wild cowboys are scheduled to be on the grounds, and in addition other attractions of "the fun of the fair" will be staged; including the usual refreshment facilities for young and old alike.

In the evening a dance will be given, and everyone connected with the Legion, the V.V.R.'s and the Red Cross (which organizations are sharing in the proceeds) is out to see that all can have a real good time. Come and bring the family! Wednesday next!

Do You know

On Sunday last while at the river at Payson, Mr. Garth Mills had the misfortune to suffer a badly cut foot which he is now resting.

It is pleasing to see Steve Boverman around again after his sick spell. He is planning to take a week or two at the coast with his family to recuperate fully.

Mr. Ted Carrier, formerly of Wainwright, was over from his home at Hughenden visiting friends.

Mr. Cecil Carl is here from Meadow Lake for a couple of days on a visit to his brother Roy.

Mr. J. Alderman, Jr., was here from Prince Albert on a short visit to his family in town.

We learn that Mr. Jim Watson, who is joining up with the naval services, has received his call to report for duty shortly.

MAKING STREETS AND SIDEWALKS SAFE

As will be noticed from a perusal of page four of this issue, the Town Council have at long last executed a bylaw for the governing of vehicular and bicycle traffic on our streets in accordance with "The Vehicle and Highway Act" of the province of Alberta.

For much too long, the practice of using the sidewalks of town streets by children (and those not so young) on bicycles has been endured, in many instances to the detriment and damage and near-injury of pedestrians. Now this is to be stopped by process of law, and these machines made to comply with the provincial law governing their use.

Again, the parking of big trucks on Main street is brought within the scope of the bylaw, as well as the observance of stopping of ALL motor vehicles at certain junctions of Main street with the avenues in town.

It will be well no doubt, that those interested carefully study the bylaw fully, and abide by its provisions and enforcement.

Rudyard Kipling Novel Showing At Theatre

Sharing honors about equally in the picture version of the Kipling novel "The Light that Failed," Ronald Colman, Walter Huston, Ida Lupino and Muriel Angelus are giving a fine strong motion picture at the Elgin theatre this week end which should be seen by all.

The story deals with a couple of war correspondents back in Old London for want of wars to cover. Colman has become a popular artist; and is told he is doomed to blindness from a war injury he rushes his masterpiece to conclusion. He is not, however, told, when blindness sets in, that his model has destroyed his work. When he learns this he makes his way to the front of another engagement and dies in a cavalry charge.

It is a strong story and makes a picture. This week end at the Elgin.

Lloydminster Fair Set For July 21-23

Exhibition days are here again, a festival of fun, frolic and friendly contest. The management of the Lloydminster Exhibition decided long ago it was going to carry on and not only have an Exhibition equal to those of past years, but actually exceed former efforts, featuring livestock, industrial and domestic exhibits and a Farm Boys' Camp open to boys from 13 to 18 years of age. This great three-day-and-three-night event also brings the best in the entertainment world, every afternoon Barnes-Carruthers, Chicago, will present a grand program of grandstand attractions and ever exciting "Colors Flying" the greatest evening show ever presented in front of the grandstand at the Exhibition.

Events have been arranged for running horses owned by about 75 miles of Exhibition with purses of from $75 to $100.

The annual baseball tournament has already drawn entries from some of the best teams, including Neilburg, Nisku, Battleford, Maitland, Mavka and Lloydminster.

Ladies' and men's softball tournament will also be played. For information on any of these events, write the manager of the Exhibition: G. M. Cook, Lloydminster.

should fail, we might still survive and maintain our independence under the guardianship of our powerful neighbor. Could the United States defend us? Doubtless she would try, but with what possible success? Think of all the jackals that would be hurrying to the kill. Think of the United States battling a world on two oceans. Think of the coast line of a continent as vast as this harried by a score of foes. Japan in the Pacific, happy at the chance to even scores and to give substance to her dream of an eastern empire. Russia to the north, already familiar with our own great northern border. Think of an arrogant Germany and Italy with all the resources of Europe and Africa at their call. Think of the millions of waiting Germans in South America.

In a recent address, Dorothy Thompson spoke of "the gothic madness of Germany." The phrase means little to us, because few of us have realized how mad Germany really is. Madness has no restraints. Its delusions of grandeur feed upon delusion until its mad dreams embrace a world. No one is outside of its reach, or free from its menace. Because of that fact, it is time that we cast loose from that noble and mistaken illusion that we are fighting to protect the motherland. We are fighting to protect our own lives, our own children, our own homes—homes here in Canada. If we don't fight this war, we are entitled to have our lives and our liberties snatched to us at little personal cost—then we are jeopardizing everything. Eventually we will be fighting for our very existence not in Europe or in Africa, or in Asia but in the pleasant fields of Canada. It is time that we Canadians awake to the realization that the mailed fist of a maniac is clamping at our own door.

"Gothic Madness Of Germany"

After almost two years of war, we Canadians as a nation have not yet answered the question: How much are we prepared to pay for our lives? This attitude springs from the confident belief that our Empire must and will survive. In all these months of war we have never really faced the possibility that it might not survive. We have watched the people of Britain face their great ordeal with that immeasurable courage that we have assumed that nothing can defeat them. As far as boundless human courage can protect them, that is true. But even courage has its boundaries. It survives while life survives. History tells us of many brave nations which have had to admit defeat.

Let us be clear on this issue. We do not believe that we will be defeated. That belief is not founded on the effectiveness of our present effort, but on the hope and conviction that, some way, we and others will come to see that there is only one way of survival. That way demands nothing short of an all-out effort of all those agencies and all those peoples who can contribute to our defence.

It would be well for us in Canada if we were not so confident. If we were less confident we would have a clearer knowledge of what defeat might mean to Canada and to us as citizens. The Nazi threat to Canada is very real, very definite, and very, very personal. Our rich fields, our amazing resources, both actual and potential, present the very "place in the sun" that Germany has sought most eagerly.

If Hitler should attempt to invade Britain, we Canadians assume he will be defeated. But, not so long ago, we believed, almost as implicitly in the inevitability of the French army. That army, reputedly the finest in the world, with our assistance sustained the assault for just two weeks.

It is idle to believe, as we have believed, that even if Britain were to fall the British fleet would still protect us. If Britain were to fall it could only be because the larger part of that fleet had been destroyed. It is idle for us to argue that if Britain

BEATING PLOWSHARES INTO TOOLS OF WAR

This is a fact, not metaphor.
A century-old Canadian manufacturing company is doing an efficient job of beating plowshares into the tools of war.

The factory is situated in an Eastern Ontario town. Not even a crumbling foundation stone remains of the old blacksmith shop which was the birthplace of the modern, sprawling industry which stands upon its site today.

For more than a hundred years this factory has been turning out farm implements that have played an important role in the development of Canadian agriculture. It still makes some implements, essential to Canadian farmers who are producing wartime food requirements, but there is an ever increasing diversion of skilled workmen and precious machines to war work.

Many of the employees are veterans whose names have been on the payrolls for 30 or 40 years. There are some whose fathers and grandfathers before them were employed by this same company, handing down their skill and knowledge from generation to generation. They have devoted their lives to making things which stand as a symbol of peace. Now they are telling as they never told before to produce a variety of weapons of war.

Chief production at present is that of rifle grenades. These are similar to the Mills bombs so familiar to those who served in the First Great War, but they have an attachment which makes it possible for them to be fired from a discharger on the muzzle of an army rifle. This increases both the range and accuracy of the grenade, a versatile and deadly weapon for close combat.

The grenade is egg-shaped, about four inches long and two inches in diameter. The outer surface is concave, both to give the thrower a better grip when the grenade is used for hand throwing, and to increase fragmentation of the steel case when it bursts.

A simple operation transforms a rifle grenade into a hand grenade in a matter of seconds.

A spring lever is recessed in the side of the bomb, which is held in place by a cotter pin. When the bomb is thrown by hand, the soldier pulls out the cotter pin, which serves as a safety catch to prevent untimely explosion in handling.

The grenade is still safe so long as the lever in the side is depressed.
When the grenade is thrown, removal of pressure on the lever releases a spring, which in turn, sets off the fuse. This time fuse burns while the grenade is in flight and ignites the explosive charge after a lapse of several seconds. The steel case is blown to pieces with terrific force, with devastating results to all who happen to be within a radius of 15 or 20 feet.

The rifle grenade differs from the hand grenade in that it has a circular steel plate, known as a gas check, attached to the base end. This gas check fits smoothly into a tubular discharger attached to the muzzle of a rifle. The butt end of the rifle is held firmly upon the ground and a blank cartridge is inserted in the breach and fired in the usual way.
The gas from the exploding cartridge builds up terrific driving power against the base plate of the grenade and huris it upon its mission of death.
The cotter pin is pulled out when the grenade is placed in the discharger, and the lever is held down by the walls of the cylinder until the grenade is on its way.

At first glance the rifle grenade seems to be a comparatively simple thing to make, but actually it is a carefully designed device requiring a high degree of precision in manufacture. Some of the tolerances in machining are as fine as 1/1000th of an inch—about one-tenth the thickness of a human hair. Each tiny component must be cut, shaped, threaded, and fitted with great exactitude.
The steel grenade shells are cast in lots of eight in modern moulding machines. After the roughness of the cast has been smoothed off by grinding, and in blast "ruminating" machines and the shot blast, the egg-shaped bomb goes to the machine shop for drilling, threading, and finishing. These operations require much skill.

Young apprentices, each trained to perform a single operation and to do it well, assemble the grenades. The body of the bomb is cleaned thoroughly and varnished inside and out.
Workers insert the tubular fuse holder—the firing pin, side lever, cotter pin and ring, gas check, filling plug, and other parts.

Every part of the grenade has been subjected to careful inspection at every step of manufacture, but there is a final careful examination before the bombs are packed in wooden cases for shipment to the filling plant where the explosive and fuses will be put in.

Thousands of grenades are made in this factory every week, and the plant is geared to meet almost any production demand.

The manager of the plant takes a keen interest in this phase of production. He was grenade instructor in the Canadian army in the first Great War. He knows almost at a glance whether a grenade is right or wrong.

"I had to learn everything there is to know about them," he related. "I know what it may mean to the boys in action if a grenade fails to go off when it should, or goes off when it shouldn't."

"These," as he pointed to a great array of shining grenades in their packing cases, "are as near perfect as we can make them."

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF
THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE
INSURANCE COMPANIES
IN CANADA

Not a single case of diphtheria has occurred in St. Catherine, Ontario, during the past two years, and only one death has occurred from the disease in the past ten years, according to a health report just issued by Dr. D. V. Curry, Medical Officer of Health.

Chief causes of death in St. Catherines are listed in Dr. Curry's report. They are: heart, arteries, kidneys, etc.; cancer; pneumonia and accidents.

More than ever before the Health Department has stressed preventive immunization for the pre-school child. A letter is sent to every mother when the baby is three months old advising vaccination against smallpox; at six months another letter is sent stressing toxoid prevention against diphtheria. When these are complete the Department advises protection against whooping cough.

St. Catherine's public health program is one of the most aggressive in Canada. Special attention is given to mothers in order to assist them to bring up healthy children. A weekly radio talk is broadcast. Newspaper co-operation is sought in circulating information concerning prevention of disease. Health bulletins are prepared for school teachers. Schoolchildren are all examined regularly.
A voluntary society known as the Public Health Auxiliary helps the Department of Health in its public education.

THEY PROFIT MOST WHO SERVE BEST

When the present war is over there will be one group of citizens to whom Canada will owe a debt of gratitude, just as surely as she will owe the same gratitude to her armed forces, says the Hanna Herald. These citizens are the men and women who are devoting their time and energies, day in and day out, to assist in the collection of money which the country must have to carry on its war programme.

Without remuneration, and in many cases at a severe sacrifice of their own personal interest, these persons rally to the cause of the War Savings Certificate, Canadian War Services funds, Red Cross funds and War Loans. They no longer close one campaign when they must start in on another such collection.

These conscientious Canadians deserve much more thanks than they actually receive for the work they do. That would help a great deal to offset some of the rude rebuffs they get from some unthinking Canadians who are only being asked to contribute their share in the battle being waged for their protection.

Each one of these workers on the home front serve just as emphatically as any other citizen in the country—their only compensation being the knowledge that they are carrying out a job that has to be done, and doing it to the best of their ability.

KEEPING UP OUR OWN END

Here in Canada, separated as we are from Europe's war by many hundreds of miles of ocean, we are indeed fortunate. But our good fortune can sometimes make us forgetful of what is going on around us. Our present apathy in this struggle stands condemned from many quarters. Soldiers, upon returning to Canada from England, have expressed their amazement at our lack of organized effort. Only recently the Premier of Ontario gave utterance to this thought: "We are satisfied to do too little too late while Hitler does too much too soon. We talk big, but we just do not deliver the goods commensurate with our organizational capabilities. I am frank to confess that, in my judgment, only the stark realization of a two-ocean invasion will awaken us from our state of apathy."

Let us pray that Ontario's premiere is wrong.
But it is up to Canadians to deliver the goods. Already Canada has delivered to the front hundreds of men trained and equipped to fight our cause. Here in Canada it is our sacred duty to keep them supplied with the weapons of war. Those of us who are not able to take up arms ourselves, should help as best they can. We can add to our nation's war effort by purchasing War Savings Certificates. If we can't fight, let's lend—And quickly!

INCLUDE POST OFFICE

WHEN MAILING TROOPS

STILL IN CANADA

The incomplete addressing of mail intended for soldiers at training camps in Canada is the cause of numerous delays in delivery. Honorable William P. Mulock, K.C., Postmaster General, to obviate this situation, again requests the full co-operation of the public in writing out in full the correct and complete address on all military mail.

It is essential that the Post Office place-name should always be included in the addresses of mail posted to soldiers still in Canada because their mail is handled by the civil post office and not by the Army Post Service. The omission of the "name of place where the soldier is located" has resulted in many such letters and parcels being forwarded to the Base Post Office, where it is found that the Unit named in the address are still in Canada. The resultant delay thus caused, and the extra work thrown upon the Canadian Postal Corps in locating the addresses of this mail would be entirely eliminated if the rules of correct addressing are observed.

Mail for Delivery in Canada should be addressed with the usual complete particulars—Regimental Number, Rank and Name, Name and details of Unit (i.e., Company or Section, Battery, Holding Unit, etc.) and Name of Regiment or branch of the service, in full; and Name of the Post Office where the soldier's Unit is located.

Mail for Delivery Overseas should bear the Regimental Number, Rank and name of soldier, Name and details of Unit, (i.e., Company or Section, Squadron, Battery, Holding Unit, etc.) Name of Regiment or branch of the service in full—and, no place-name should be given. All letters should be fully prepaid, and a return address should be given in the upper left-hand corner.

A new feature of this year's show "Frustration" which will be presented by J. W. "Fatty" Condon. This midway has for years been the centre of attraction at the Canadian National

How Does Your Label Read?

CALL TO YOUNG MEN

The Editor:

A beautifully decorated torch of gilded aluminum was flown by Canada to England. It typifies the flaming loyalty of sons who cannot bear to see their mother suffer without flying to her aid. We fling it across the Atlantic in token that brave hearts and stout arms will quickly follow to the rescue of our motherland. It goes, too, in faithful memory of those loyal hearts whose mortal part is now the dust in Flanders' fields, our men who scorned to save their lives when duty called, but most gloriously died that we may live.

The writer, as administrative staff officer M.D. 11, 1911-1919, had chief responsibility in mobilization and sending overseas of 55,000 men from British Columbia. At this crisis of the fight for liberty, he would now like to ask any able-bodied young Canadians who still hang back to check up and think how they will stand when freedom's fight is won.

The urgent call today is for recruits. Tomorrow it will be conscription. There is still volunteer; there is still your own; or wait until you are drafted—as you would be now in England, Australia, South Africa, or the U.S.A.—then you will have no choice; you will go where you are sent. In 1918, when drafting services began, some were sorry they had not volunteered.

Conscription is bad; it may split Canada like a wedge. But, if we are to keep our liberties, it may have to come! Volunteer now! Only you can honor our dead who live forevermore," by taking up the torch they pass to you.

New Electric Energy Rates

PROPOSED IN RENEWAL OF FRANCHISE AGREEMENT

For Exclusive Domestic Service:
It is proposed to charge monthly against each and every domestic service a gross amount of $2.70, which includes service charge and the use of electric energy up to and including 20 Kilowatt-hours. The consumer, by making payment monthly within the discount period, would receive an allowance of 30 cents by way of discount for prompt payment, which would reduce the net minimum charge against each service to $2.40. A consumer who uses more than 20 Kilowatt-hours in any month, would be required to make settlement for the excess of 20 Kilowatt-hours on the basis and would be charged, in addition, 2 cents net for each Kilowatt-hour used by him during the month in excess of the said 20 Kilowatt-hours.

It is proposed to charge new customers $2.70 for each connection and to charge $4.80 for each reconnection.

For Commercial Service:
It is proposed to make a service charge of 40 cents per month to the commercial consumer for the first 600 watts or portion thereof of installed capacity and 10 cents per month for each additional 250 watts or portion thereof and a monthly charge for energy on the following basis, viz: First 100 Kilowatt-hours per month per Kilowatt of installed capacity or fraction thereof—10 cents per Kilowatt-hour and all over 100 Kilowatts of installed capacity or fraction thereof—10 cents per 20 Kilowatt-hours with a minimum monthly charge of $1.00. The consumer's deposit to be twice the gross monthly minimum charge or, at the option of the company, twice the consumer's estimated monthly bill.

Reconnection charge to be $3.00.

WORLD'S WEEK

Associate Editor of the "Edmonton Bulletin" and author of the daily column "From the News."

The Russian situation has been boiling and bubbling this week like that perpetual stew which the home-steader is said to have kept always on the stove and to have called the "pot of astonishment" because so many queer things went into it that he never knew what he was going to get out.

So many circumstances enter into the Russian situation that it is almost impossible to keep track of them.

In most ways there is a clear-cut issue and two clear-cut possibilities. One side or the other must win. And it is not insurmountably difficult in such cases to hit down and figure out pretty closely what will happen in either eventuality.

No such speculation can reasonably take place with regard to Hitler's entanglement with the Soviets. There is such a multiplicity of possibilities that one can only pick out the most likely ones and examine them.

In the first place, Hitler may both defeat the Russians and be defeated by them. He can keep on winning battles and changing their armies all over their tremendously large country. And yet he may lose thousands of men and tons of supplies doing so without gaining a single point that may be regarded as a decisive victory.

It is possible that he may never lose an engagement and still emerge from the campaign immeasurably poorer than when he went in.

If Stalin abstains from surrender, which is always a possibility at any time, Hitler may march in vain through devastated crop lands and dynamited oil fields without gaining anything of value.

Unless the Germans soon give up in disgust and withdraw entirely from Russia, this fruitless campaign might continue for some time.

In that case, there is a strong possibility that Britain may feel herself strong enough and the time opportunity enough to risk a large-scale invasion on German or German-occupied soil.

This, of course, is what the British high command is hoping for—the chance to strike a blow that will eventually weaken German domestic morale.

The many other possibilities in the situation, however, should not be overlooked.

Hitler might realize the impossibility of coming to grips with Russian armies in such a manner as to make material gains within Russia. Yet he might continue his advance in Russia for the sole purpose of working himself into such positions that he could loose lightning bolts at India or at Iran.

He might even push on through Siberia to establish air bases from which North America could be threatened.

There are any number of moves he might back, using Russia as a pivot from which many parts of the world could be menaced.

The point of this dissertation on the uncertainties presented by the Russian campaign is simply to emphasize the fact that Hitler's present engagement with Russia does not justify by any means any relaxation of effort throughout the Empire or the United States.

The present situation either offers a tremendous opportunity or holds a tremendous threat.

In either case, all the forces of democracy should prepare for an all-out effort greater than any that has been attempted before.

It is clear that President Roosevelt is intensely aware of this fact. That is why he continues to return equivocal answers to questions enquiring into America's probable entry into the war.

The President will go as far as to say that he still "hopes" the United States can keep out of it. It is obvious that this "hope" is not backed by any deep conviction.

If the Russian situation holds a threat, the United States will have to be one of those to reply to that threat.

If the Russian situation holds an opportunity, the United States will have to be one of those to seize it. What is happening in Russia may be the source of great grief or great jubilation.

The civilized peoples of the world should be thoroughly ready to make a manful response in either case.

EDGERTON

William H. Shaver, a well-known resident in this vicinity for many years, passed away during the early hours of Dominion Day. Death was due to pneumonia, but he had been in poor health for some time. He was 75 years of age. His death occurred at his farm home N.E. of Bloomington, and a large number of friends attended the funeral services which were conducted at the house, and graveside, on Wednesday afternoon, July 2nd, by the Rev. C. H. Morrison, interment being made in the Prospect Valley Cemetery. Many beautiful floral tributes proved the high esteem in which the late gentleman had been held. Predeceased by his wife in March of last year, he leaves to mourn his loss, two daughters and one son, Mrs. E. G. Bransgrove, and John, of this district, and Mrs. J. W. Lewis of Edmonton, also several grandchildren and one great grandchild. Sincere sympathy is extended to the bereaved family.

Jack and Elsie Ford, of Heath, also Leone Bransgrove and Gene Trauner of this district, left by car on Saturday evening for Calgary to take in the Stampede.

The holiday spirit last week must have affected you truly, or the proof reader—maybe both! At any rate there were two errors we must correct, and here they are—Ed Kingston is recuperating at the home of his brother Reg, not his son, and the Major A. E. Ripley mentioned, was none other than our worthy Mayor of the same name. Apologies to all concerned.

Alfred Lawrence, our former telephone operator, was taken to Wainwright hospital last Saturday night. At time of writing no information in regard to his condition has been received.

RENDEZ-VOUS IN VIENNA

BY LESLIE HAMILTON

CHAPTER SEVEN
Olga Von Mueller

Rex waited no time after reaching Berlin, where inquiry as to trains from the station interpreter elicited the information that he could carry on to his destination almost immediately. If he didn't mind changing at Dordrecht and Prague. Deciding upon that route, he continued his journey without further delay and reached Vienna after a weary all night session exactly one week before Germany unleashed her war dogs on Europe for the second time within a quarter of a century.

Checking his bag at the station, Munroe then went straight to the Elite Hotel where he availed himself of the facilities of the public rooms downstairs and indulged in a very welcome wash and brushing up.

Feeling considerably refreshed after the much needed slumbers, he retraced his steps to the main floor, had breakfast in the restaurant, enquired from the hotel porter the whereabouts of the principal tourist office, after which he moved off in the first step of his plan to establish contact with Olga Von Mueller.

It wasn't far away, almost across the street bringing Rex to the office of one of the principal travel bureaus. Stepping over to the cashier's wicket he bought a hundred German marks, causing the rate disgustedly as he did so, which hurt like the very devil at just over eleven marks to the pound. On this kind of expedition, however, cash was the only medium it was safe to use. Travel mark checks with their income restrictions, and the compulsory entry of every transaction in his passport by pompous bank officials didn't suit Munroe's purpose at all; one might just as well make a daily report of one's whereabouts to the German Secret Police as leave visiting cards of that sort all over the place. For the same reason, Rex refrained from taking a room in the hotel, as the special registration of all aliens required by the police might prove disastrous should his connection with the von Mueller girl become known before they could make their escape from Vienna.

Crossing to the tourist counter, Munroe procured a map of the central part of the city, spread it out on a nearby writing desk, provided for the convenience of patrons, located the Langgasse, judged it within reasonable walking distance and set out on a preliminary reconnaissance of number 42, which proved, after he located the place, to be a set of apartments built over a local shop of all varieties. Selecting a convenient spot from where he could keep the entrance under observation, Rex filled and lighted his pipe before settling down to a watching vigil of the premises, with a devout though silent prayer that it would not prove to be one of two lengthy durations. In thinking the matter over previously he decided his best plan would be to watch the girl's apartment and await a moment when he saw her entering or leaving the building before attempting to make any advances in her direction. He certainly couldn't afford to risk drawing suspicious attention upon himself by making direct enquiries from the caretaker, even supposing the blithering spoke English, which was doubtful. Such persons, along with hotel servants and the like, it was wise to regard as the stool pigeons which experience had taught Munroe the great majority of them usually were. Here in Germany, a country honeycombed with informers, God alone knew to what extent such unofficial espionage might exist in order to curry favor with the infamous Gestapo! By waiting until his quarry appeared in public and then following her at a discreet distance he could check whether she was still under observation before attempting to approach her. Once satisfied that the coast was clear it would be quite safe to accost her, especially on the boulevard where a "pick-up" would excite no comment. If she were followed by a police agent, some other means of communicating with her would have to be devised, but for a beginning, however, the course he was adopting seemed the only feasible one under the circumstances, so Munroe patiently resigned himself to await events.

Not long after he had taken up a suitable position, which permitted him to observe without being too conspicuous himself, the clock of a nearby church struck the mid-day hour, followed shortly afterwards by the half hour, then one o'clock; later on two, and finally three; but wary a sign of the person he so desperately wanted to see, as the leaden minutes dragged slowly by.

Suddenly he was all attention! A smartly dressed young woman seemed to be making for the entrance of the flats. Sure enough, she stopped in front of the doorway, extracted a bunch of keys from her handbag, selected one and, after quickly unlocking the street door, promptly disappeared inside.

"That's her!" Munroe muttered, "if her photograph doesn't lie. Now I wonder how much longer I'll have to wait before she comes out again," he murmured, knocking the ashes from his pipe on the heel of his shoes. His patience was not unduly tried on this occasion, however, for just on four o'clock she reappeared and, setting off at a leisurely pace, headed towards the centre of the city. Waving in and out amongst the opposing streams of pedestrians, and with Rex watching carefully to see if she was shadowed, the girl finally reached a prominent intersection of the boulevard not far from Munroe's original starting point. Turning right at this juncture and continuing on past the Vienna Opera House, the young woman abruptly terminated all further speculation as to her final destination by entering a gay and popular restaurant situated on the next corner.

It was the Entrancing Cafe, one of the many attractive eating places on the wide and lovely tree-shaded Kartnersasse where a mixed crowd of cafe patrons, idling under a striped awning covered over section, were lolling in easy chairs and slowly sipping aperitifs, lunching or drinking beer, etc., as they watched the crowds go by and listened to the pleasant Magyar gypsy melodies.

"What a break!" Munroe breathed in relief, passing for a final glance around to make certain they were not specially observed. Satisfied there was no one particularly interested in their movements, he also entered the restaurant and, strolling nonchalantly between the scattered tables, eventually spied the one at which she was just in the act of seating herself.

Pretending to look around for someone he had come to meet, he paused a moment, then stepping to her table as though she were the person he expected—and with his left hand affording her a clear view of the signet ring upon his finger—he smiled in pleasant greeting and said: "Pardon me, Fraulein. You weren't expecting me I know, but I came here especially to meet you, strange as it may seem under the circumstances."

Her attitude of resentment at his approach, melting into one of surprise and interest upon being addressed in English, ended in a sudden but quickly smothered gasp of astonishment as she recognized the ring.

"Who are you?" she whispered, with a quick furtive glance at the occupants of a nearby table, inviting the tall, self-possessed stranger to take a chair beside her.

"Order a bottle of wine for two," Munroe calmly requested, noticing an alert waiter bearing down upon them. "I hate to embarrass a lady, but unfortunately I cannot speak German."

Having carried out his request, she again turned to him as the waiter departed and repeated: "Who are you?"

"And where did you get that ring?"

"You should know where I acquired the ring, if you are the person I came to seek?"

"You must have obtained it from either Felix or Freda, and in that case you should know who they are!"

"I do!" he answered promptly. "Felix is your brother-in-law and Freda is your sister. The ring belonged to your father, and you are Olga von Mueller, isn't that correct?" he added drawing a cigar from his jacket pocket as he said: "May I smoke?"

"You are quite right, and I'm very pleased to meet you, Mr. . . ." she replied, answering his request by extracting a cigarette from a case which she fished from the depths of her hand-bag.

"Andrew Roxborough Munroe at your service, and yours to command!" he smiled, striking a match and holding the flame to the tip of her cigarette before lighting his own cigar.

"Thank heaven they have found someone to help me before it's too late!" she exclaimed, relaxing in joyful relief as the fumes took effect from her face. "Once war broke out it will be hopeless!"

"Careful! here's the waiter," Rex admonished as a burly server came swiftly towards them with a bottle of sparkling Moselle, which the girl had ordered.

"By the way, you are an American Mr. Munroe?" she ventured, after the waiter had charged their wine goblets and departed.

"You guessed wrong," Rex laughed. "I'm British. A veritable 'Tommy' in the eyes of the Boche. My adopted country, however, where I was brought up, is Canada, which accounts for my North American accent."

"Oh! I am so sorry that I unwittingly hurt your feelings," she apologized. "To mistake one's nationality can be sometimes so dreadfully gauche!"

"Good Lord no! That doesn't apply where Canadians and Americans are concerned," Munroe assured her. "We have too much in common to be touchy about that sort of thing."

"I am half British myself, - I have probably been told," she remarked between agitated puffs on her cigarette, and was simply dreading the prospect of being marooned in the unfortunate country in war time. But if you came to help me, a gleam of renewed hope appearing in the big brown eyes, "perhaps there is a chance of getting out of it?"

"I came for that purpose, as well as a number of other reasons," he affirmed. "But don't you think it would be wise, before we go fully into things, to adjourn to a more private place than this public cafe?"

"I have been watching your apartment ever since I arrived for an opportunity of approaching you without being observed, and as far as I could make out we weren't followed when I trailed you here; still, one never knows who may be watching us in a place like this, what do you think?"

"You are quite right," she agreed, "although I am not under close surveillance any longer." An item of information which was both surprising and pleasing to her interlocutor, who asked: "Why is that?"

"I do not know. I imagine it's because there is more pressing work for police spies at present. I am not entirely a free will agent, nevertheless, as I have to report every day to police headquarters without fail. Either that—or a concentration camp!"

"The daily risk is irksome, but the cancellation of the close watch is fortunate," Munroe commented, reflecting that for once a camera had failed to do a photographic subject full justice. "I was anticipating all sorts of difficulties in contacting you privately," he went on, "but as the old adage tells us: 'it's an ill wind that blows nobody any good.'"

"Yes—we have the war-fever to thank for that good fortune, undoubtedly. But when did you arrive in Vienna?" her favorable opinion of Munroe mounted rapidly as she regarded him with interested anticipation.

"On the morning train from Prague. In the interim I checked my bag at the station, had breakfast and, after locating where you lived, simply watched and waited until you appeared. Our next move is to find a suitable place where we can talk undisturbed, and when you can read a confidential letter I brought from your sister," whispered in a subdued undertone as Munroe quietly attended the glorious titan tresses of the beautiful girl beside him.

"But I simply cannot wait another minute to read Freda's letter!" she protested with suppressed excitement. "After the silent notes of the past which is all I've had since they fled the country, it will be a treat to read something which has not been censored. It will be quite safe," she added, seeing the look of doubt in her companion's expression. "There is a private boudoir attached to the ladies' room in this cafe which is an ideal place for pursuing private correspondence. After I've read it," she pleaded, "if it will ally your misgivings, I'll destroy it."

"Okay, Munroe yielded, "but do a first class job of destruction—burn it, and then flush the ashes down a wash basin."

"That is exactly what I intended to do, and thanks ever so much," she flashed him a smile of gratitude as

Rex surrendered the letter from her kinswoman. "I will be back in a few minutes."

"Freda von Arnberg was a hundred per cent correct," Munroe reflected, watching her trim figure thread a way gracefully between the tables, "she is certainly an attractive and charming young woman all right, and judging from what I've already seen," he continued in a meditative soliloquy, "she also appears to be a 'dam good scout', and if my own hunch is to be trusted I think she will prove a cool hand in this business—that God for that! I'll soon know how broadminded she is too," he went on, with a low chuckle, "when I spring this 'passport map' ruse' stunt. By jove—excuse me!" he exclaimed in startled surprise, her unnoted return bringing him to his feet in apologetic greeting. "It didn't take you very long to read the letter!"

"No, it didn't!" she replied with a sigh of disappointment. "Freda was evidently too excited to write much. A sketchy outline of what it's all about, introduction of yourself, and that's all. She does ask me, however, to place myself unreservedly in your hands, and to trust you implicitly."

"Are you willing to do so?" Rex asked quietly, after a short silence in which they eyed each other in mute appraisal.

"My own instinct prompts me to say yes—even without Freda's letter," the girl replied slowly. "In her answer in the affirmative—yes—absolutely," she announced decisively after a long searching look into Munroe's full blue-grey eyes, frankly returning her own probing gaze with one of equal clarity and candour.

"Thank you very much," Munroe smiled in reply. "Especially for your personal faith, aside from any assurance your sister's letter may have given you."

"I have always been considered an excellent judge of character," she stated simply, "and with Freda's recommendation to back it up, I am not afraid to trust you completely, although I fully realize the consequences of failure."

Reaching for one of the still untouched wine glasses, Rex smiled at her to do likewise, saying in a firm, low voice as he did so: "My acknowledgment of your tribute can best be expressed by a toast—and this is it: 'Here's to our success; and no matter what may befall us, I hereby pledge you the same care, and protection while in my charge which your own brother would bestow upon you under similar circumstances.'"

"Thank you," she whispered, her

CANADIAN INDUSTRY
AN EMPIRE BULWARK

Never in the history of human conflict has industrial capacity, skill and production efficiency counted for so much as it does in the present national emergency. Fortunate indeed are we, therefore, that Canada's comparatively young but virile industrial set-up had been developed to its present high efficiency, otherwise we could not have made the contribution expected of us and so vital to the success of our cause. Management and men of industry, quick to respond to the call of Empire, mobilized its forces with remarkable adaptability, swinging rapidly into production of much needed mechanized units, munitions and equipment of all kinds.

Rounding out our national activities in a more balanced economy, Canadian industry has in addition to serving well the home market, developed a substantial and profitable export business. The industrial areas, too, provide ready and profitable markets for our own agricultural products. But great as may be its peace-time contribution to the west of Canada, Canadian industry rises new heights in the contribution being made in producing the requirements of mechanized warfare.

Massey-Harris is proud of the part it has been permitted to play in the development of Canada so far and in the defence of its dearly treasured traditions and of democracy in general.

Quite a number of townspeople attended the big stampede at Viking on Friday last. We learn the whole affair was a huge success and the day very enjoyable.

Mr. F. C. Wright, of Edmonton, has been transferred here as operator at the depot. He and his family will occupy the house just vacated by Mrs. McNulty.

Mr. M. O'Rourke left on Saturday for a short holiday with friends at the coast.

Mr. Pat McIntee is home on a two weeks' leave from his army duties.

Virg. Nelson is now away to Kilham, where he is working as holiday relief.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Withnell, Sr., of Heath, are away to the city to spend a few days with their daughter there.

We are informed that Mr. George Clark has purchased the Springfield house on Fourth avenue east and will move his family there shortly.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Siddall, formerly of Wainwright, are over from Hanna, and enjoying their annual vacation at their cottage at Clear Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Burke are here from McLeod to enjoy a short holiday with Mrs. Burke's mother, Mrs. J. Welch.

Miss Lela Mackay is spending a holiday with her sister, Mrs. J. Mitchell in the city.

We understand that both Vic Devignon and Eddie Walker have both received their call for army duty and will be reporting shortly.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Gregson left for Calgary last week, Jack having accepted a position there.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Willett are in town from the city for a couple of weeks visiting friends while here.

Mr. L. M. Rault, aged 33, of Chauvin, who was visiting with his wife and family at Riley, was killed, and R. Brown of Edmonton was injured in a plane crash there on Saturday evening last. Mr. Rault was a passenger in the machine which was giving passenger flights.

FOUR FROM ONE FAMILY!
So far as we can learn the greatest contribution from any one family in this district is from the family of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Wear, of Wainwright. In this instance, Charlie, Sr., and his son Dave are both in the air force, while Chas., Jr., and Bob are both with the active service forces. This making four from the same family—a worthy record.

Instead, as some of my readers can confirm, the Germans knew everything we did, because men like that French signalman could not keep their mouths shut.

Here is one of the most serious problems of the war.

It is important to realize that everything known something which Hitler would like to know. The information may be gained at work, or from relatives, in factories or in the f.o.c.s. It may only be fragmentary, but it is none the less important.

Many people help the German Secret Service merely because they do not know how it works. Perhaps they have been misled by the films—they are looking for a face of a Conrad Veidt and a bevy of glamorous blondes.

German agents depend very largely upon their unpaid and unwitting helpers. Their methods are not dramatic, nor do they need be. Each day may provide them with fragments for their jig-saw puzzles. The ramifications of these puzzles extend far and wide. And that is the lesson for Canada.

PUZZLES OF THE GERMAN SPY

(By Bernard Newman, famous authority on international affairs)

An officer of the French counter-espionage service once remarked to me: "Our greatest problem is not the German spy, but people who do not mean any harm."

He was right. I could quote dozens of confirmatory examples from my own experience. Some of the men reading these lines will remember the Battle of the Somme in 1916. The first idea was a surprise attack—by far the best form. Information continuously leaked over to the Germans, however. I was one of the plumbers deputed to trace the leak.

I went back to Amiens, the great railway centre. My disguise was very simple: no whiskers or grease paint. I was a British private soldier and I pretended to be half-tight—a very easy disguise. For three weeks I hung around public houses frequented by French railwaymen.

It was all rather boring. (Then one evening I met a Frenchman who turned out to be a signalman. Rubbing his hands, he announced to his friends at the bar: "Ah, my lands, the old Booke is going to get it in the neck now. Another eleven train loads of ammunition up today—two train loads of guns. Old Jerry is going to taste his own medicine."

That might be a flash in the pan, so I went back the next night, and the next. When I arrested that man, he nearly went through the roof.

"What!" he cried, "Me helping the enemy! My dear sir, you never made a bigger mistake in your life—it's exactly the other way around. My friends at the bar never heard a man so like it in my life—never want to hear a man so like it again. But all the sobbing in the world could not save him—far more important—all the sobbing in the world could not save the lives of thousands of British soldiers; lives which might have been saved if the Somme had been a surprise attack.

Instead, as some of my readers can confirm, the Germans knew everything we did, because men like that French signalman could not keep their mouths shut.

German agents depend very largely upon their unpaid and unwitting helpers. Their methods are not dramatic, nor do they need be. Each day may provide them with fragments for their jig-saw puzzles. The ramifications of these puzzles extend far and wide. And that is the lesson for Canada.
